Dulles Doubts a Real Split Between Moscow, Peiping

Washington, Dec. 31 (UPI).—Allen W. Dulles, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said today the Soviet Union and Red China have sharp differences but the West cannot count on an open breach between the two countries.

Dulles said the disagreements between the two leading Communist countries "run very deep."

However, I do not think we should delude ourselves by thinking they run so deeply that there is likely to be an open split between Moscow and Peiping," he said.

Dulles, who retired from the CIA Nov. 29 after almost nine years as director, said on the TV show Meet The Press that the basic difference between the two nations was over methods of achieving a Communist "master program for taking over the world."

"Khrushchev, having repudiated Stalin and Stalinism, now says it ought to be done under the guise of co-existence" while the Red Chinese urge aggressive tactics and the possible use of military force, Dulles said.
